

Unveiling the Role of Singing in Revealing Musicality

Isabelle Peretz, University of Montreal, CA

Singing is a natural and pervasive human behavior that serves communication and coordination. Despite its significant role in musical experience, singing remains an understudied topic within psychology. I will present evidence that singing uniquely unveils musicality by transcending traditional paradigms and appears neurally distinct.